

I believe that cellular phone useage on airborne planes should be restricted to approximately 1 minute per call. This would allow passengers to check their voicemail meaasges in-flight and coordinate travel arrangements with friends/family before arriving at the terminal, but it would avoid causing annoyance among passengers who wish to have peace and quiet during the majority of their flight.